

CTC Intensive Training Workshop

Diversification for Play Therapists Series

Delivering Therapeutic Mental Health Programmes in Schools

Edel Lawlor

Dates: 11th March 2018

Fee: €110

Play therapists often need support in entering new markets and providing a broader range of child and family interventions in addition to play therapy. This workshop is part of a series of training events which support this diversification of practice by play therapists and other suitably qualified professionals.

This experiential training day addresses all that is involved in planning, developing, and delivering therapeutic mental health programmes for children in primary school settings. It focuses on two creative arts based programmes that Edel developed:

1. Happy Hearts, Happy Heads - a mental health programme for primary schools. This programme is designed and delivered to raise awareness about mental health in children. A 3 tier approach is used, involving children, parents and teachers, so that everyone gets to learn about mental health and ways big people can look out for little people's hearts and heads. The children's sessions include the use of stories, arts and puppets.
2. To Leave with Ease – making the transition from primary school to secondary school. This full day programme involves a full school day creative workshop with 6th class students. The idea is to help students with concerns they may have about secondary school, celebrating change and recording positive memories of primary school through creative activities. It also includes a parents workshop (evening) - helping parents to help their children with transition and exploring the world of teenagers.

Content during this training day includes:

- Linking mental health, wellbeing, and personal development with specialised programmes
- Working with schools using a 3 pin approach: children, teachers and parents;
- Setting up and promoting both the Happy Hearts, Happy Heads and the To Leave with Ease programmes;
- Advertising and networking;
- Materials required;
- Delivering both programmes, including content.
